Why Does My Pet Have Bad Breath?

Pet owners might think dog and cat bad breath is an inevitable part of pet parenthood, but the reality is, bad breath stinks - and we're not just talking about the stench! Bad breath in dogs and cats isn't normal or healthy and can actually be a sign that something else is wrong with your pet.

The first step in freshening your pet's breath is finding out what is causing the unfortunate odour.

Bad breath in dogs

Dogs are natural explorers and tend to eat a lot of things they shouldn't – from that old sandwich under the couch to even their own poop. But when dog bad breath is consistently making your eyes water, it's time to look beyond their unusual diet.

Bad breath in dogs can be caused by a variety of factors, including poor oral hygiene, diet, or an underlying health condition. If your pooch consistently has offensive dog bad breath, it's crucial to investigate further and address the root cause.

Bad breath in cats

Cats are known for their grooming habits, but that doesn't mean their mouths are always clean. Bad breath in cats can be just as problematic as it is for dogs. Cat bad breath could be caused by several issues, from dental disease to diet, poor oral hygiene, respiratory issues, and diabetes.

While the reason for your cat's stinky breath could be as simple as the lingering smell of their food, persistent halitosis can be a sign of something more serious. Taking care to notice your cat's breath can help diagnose and address the problem faster.

What bad breath may mean

The reason we need to be vigilant against bad breath in cats and dogs is because it can be a stinky alarm that something larger is wrong. Causes of dog and cat bad breath include:

- Bad oral hygiene: Plaque and tartar build-up can lead to gingivitis (inflammation of the gums) or periodontitis\(open in new tab\) (oral disease), both of which cause bad breath.
- Poor diet: Pets eating things they shouldn't or being fed low-quality, filler-laden foods can result in halitosis.
- Gastrointestinal problems: Digestive issues such as inflammatory bowel disease can also cause bad breath. The Waltham Petcare Science Institute\(open in new tab\) has found that when pets' gut microbiomes are unbalanced, it can affect their oral health.
- Diabetes: If cat or dog bad breath is sweet or fruity in odour, it could be an indicator of diabetes.
- Kidney Disease: Bad breath that smells like urine and ammonia might be a sign of kidney disease.

How to tackle bad breath

Luckily, there are several simple and effective ways to combat bad breath in cats and dogs.

Changing their food

High-quality, balanced diets can help reduce bad breath in dogs and cats. Switching up your pet's dry food or adding tasty snacks that are specially formulated to promote dental health can be a game changer.

Regular tooth brushing

Regular brushing can help keep plaque and tartar at bay, preventing bad breath from taking over. Use a pet-friendly toothpaste and, while daily brushing is best, aim for at least three sessions a week.

Using dental treats

Dental treats and chews, like GREENIES™ Dental Treats, are a fun and healthy way to keep your pet's breath smelling fresh. GREENIES™ products are accepted by the Veterinary Oral Health Council\(open in new tab\) for at-home dental care and are turbocharged with nutrients and fresh herbs to clean your pet's teeth and neutralise odours. Plus, they come in a variety of flavours that your pet will love. It's a win-win!

When to see a vet

If you've tried everything and your pet's breath still reeks, it's time to consult your vet. Your vet can perform a thorough dental examination and cleaning, addressing any underlying issues.

Bad breath in pets is a common issue, but it doesn't have to be a permanent one. Don't hold your breath, freshen theirs by establishing a daily oral care routine for a healthier tomorrow! For more tips and tricks on keeping your pet's breath fresh and their health in check, visit our blog.
